A screenshot of the GitHub sign-up page. The background is a dark blue gradient with white stars. In the top left corner is the GitHub logo. In the top right corner, the text "Already have an account? Sign in →" is displayed. The main content is centered in a dark grey rounded rectangle. It starts with "Welcome to GitHub!" and "Let's begin the adventure" in a monospace font. Below that is the prompt "Enter your email*" in a teal color. To the left of the email input field is a red arrow icon. To the right of the input field is a "Continue" button. At the bottom of the form, there is a paragraph of text: "By creating an account, you agree to the Terms of Service. For more information about GitHub's privacy practices, see the GitHub Privacy Statement. We'll occasionally send you account-related emails." data-bbox="50 162 944 880"/>

The screenshot shows the GitHub Copilot sign-up page in a browser. The page features the GitHub logo and the text "GitHub Copilot Your AI pair programmer". The main heading is "Start your 30-day free trial". Below this, there is a list of benefits: "Get code suggestions in more than a dozen coding languages including Python, JavaScript, TypeScript, Go, and Ruby", "Plugs into IDEs including VS Code, Visual Studio, Neovim, and JetBrains", "Sign up for an annual subscription and get two months free!", and "Cancel anytime before the trial ends to avoid getting billed". The "Pay frequency after trial" section offers two options: "Monthly plan" for $10/month and "Yearly plan" for $100/year, with a "Save $20!" note next to the yearly plan. A green button at the bottom says "Get access to GitHub Copilot".
